

I think the technology behind BPL is great. I believe the future behind it is promising. The only problem I will have with it are the teleco's trying to raise the cost of it as they do with everything else. The lines are already laid to virtually every home in the world, so companies don't have to worry about the cost of laying lines. The only real cost is the equipment to piggyback onto the power lines. Since this is the just about the only real cost involved, the price should be less then cable, ISDN, or DSL now.